AN ANGRY FOREIGNER.

It was all about the pitiful sum of $2.60. gad the hatchet been a little sharper, or Kiewe's head a bit softer, Kiewe gight now be lying cold in death.

H. L. Heede is a decorator and upplaterer, and his place of business is No. is north Fourth street. It is but a small shop, and the only evidence it gives of character of the business therein carried on is one small, rather dilapidated soking sofa in the middle of the room. This is how the trouble came about; as his name indicates, is as his name indicates, is a super. He has not been long in this niry, and cannot speak English very the happened to come to Richmond, Heede took him in out of pity. He d Kiewe he would give him a dollar or Kiewe he would give him a dollar or week until he learned the business, kiewe was giad to get a place at price, and accepted at once. Heede he foreigner sleep in the store, and e things ran along smoothly, he man-to eke put a light. But he was large of to cke out a living. But he was lazy indefent, so the landlord says, and his could only hold out till last Wednesany could only hold out till last Wednesday, when he told him to try for some wher work. Kiewe said nothing in reply, he slept on there until last night, and heede's patience became exhausted. He had kiewe to sthy away, and boiled the sor against him. But Kiewe warted that too, which he insists Heede owes him, and as it seems he could not get it, he ned to take it out on Heede. His Duich Temper.

argued through the key-hole last night, until Klewe's Dutch temper got the best of him and he shoved his arm the best of him and he shoved his through the frail glass door in Heede's face. The latter, thereupon got equally mad and picked up a convenient hatchet. Klewe thought the door ought not to stay up under the circumstances, and ceded to break it in. He succeed-as created, he came in contact with hatchet. The dull instrument dropd twice against his skull without ust then, several persons who were at-racted by the noice, stepped in and revented further chance of bloodshed. Glewe broke out with repeated hardly elligible demands for his $2.00, and elle, who was crazy with anger, pro-ded to throw his employe's goods and hatfels on the sidewalk. They discussthrough the advice of bystanders the drelpher gathered up his things and salked slowly away. Heede could not eave his dilapidated shop, and no policeman appeared on the scene.

Heede says that Kiewe had better not come back for that $2.60.

The Governor Escaped, But the Fakir Did the Proper Thing.

The Governor was not in it. The report that Orgoodby, the Pictorial World fakir, had secured his Excellency's picture for that journal is untrue. But "What a lot of sore-headed, empty-pocket indilike a comet, if one judges by the number of his victims. There was something atractive about the fellow. He was tractive about the fellow. He was one of the most magnetic men that struck the city for quite a while. And what a number he drew. Like a crop of mushrooms, they seem to have sprung up in a single night. There was Commonwealth's Attorney Conway R. Sands, Circuit Clerk Broaddus, Sheriff Simon Solomon, Commissioner of the Revenue Kemp, Treasuer Brauer, Deputy Treasuer Jeter, Clerk Childrey, Jailer Lew Fussell, and Squire G. C. Vincent, all of Henrico county, with a host of others. This is not all. Oh, no! That fakir, that cubtle and genuine fakir, was too refined to and genuine fakir, was too refined to hing, so he passed a bogus draft for $29 at one of those innocent people who do not object to being humbugged. His nemory is cherished, so to speak.

A Strong Pro est From the Norfolk Cham

NORFOLK, VA., Jan. 12.-Special .- The Chamber of Commerce, at a meeting tonight, adopted a strong series of resolutions protesting against coal and lumber tions protesting against coal and limber being put upon the free list. They de-clare that Virginia and West Virginia furnish over 3,590,900 tons of bituminous coal for sirpment from Lambert's Point and Newport News, employing some 3,000 vessels for cargo, and supplying 1,000 steamships with fuel; that three-fifths of this coal rose to ports on the eastern steamships with fuel; that three-fifths of this coal goes to ports on the eastern coast for steam purposes.

To put coal on the free list will, it is asserted, destroy the frade of the southern coal ports, and deprive the government of $1,000,000 received on coal imports. The resolutions declare that it is a discrimination against Virginia coal, and will drive it from the eastern markets, because of the proximity to Nova Scotia. Virginia and West Virginia members are urged to resist.

Cor cetton. To the Times: In your paper of the 10th I am reported as saying to the Con-mittee on Agriculture this: 'He thought it to be to the advantage of the farmers and of the State to have as many fertilizers used as possible." It should have been, "to have as many fertilizers mannfactured as possible." Probably I said "made" instead of "manufactured," and one not initiated into the mysteries of the trade might be easily misted. The injudicious, indiscriminate use is loss to the farmer.
